

SOURCESLATIN AMERICA and WEST INDIES

The source codes recorded on the "Reference" line are important because they indicate that a collectible token, allowing for accuracies of description, was actually offered for sale on the given date. Descriptions from book and journal references may list tokens that are unavailable; because they are great rarities locked away in a collection, because they have been lost, or even because they are speculative ... tokens that logically should have existed, but whose existence has not been confirmed. The number of "source" entries is a more accurate indication of what is actually available to collectors.

The addresses are the last known to me, and should not be assumed to be a current place of business unless the last date is fairly close to the current date. The dates themselves, added in response to a suggestion by numismatist Dulio Vaia, represent only a range for which I have seen sale records, not necessarily the dates when the dealer was in business. Where the last date is lined out, the dealer is known to be out of business, or at least out of the exnumia business. Where the last date is a question mark, (--?--), the single date usually represents a single contact with a local dealer, a single price list seen, or just as often, a single offer of tokens by a coin dealer who seldom deals in foreign exnumia.

More recently the printed price lists and catalogs are being replaced by Internet sales through ebay or from the sellers own website. On the negative side these Internet sellers are almost always anonymous. They commonly identify themselves only by net names and ebay/email addresses. The city and country where the token is located is almost always present, but there are a few exceptions. On the positive side the offers to sell are almost invariably accompanied by a photo of the token offered. This is a big improvement over the printed offers to sell where photographs are rare, descriptions routinely cryptic and the grading is all too often whimsical.
